Such devices are still in use but haven't yet been widely accepted as reliable tools for pain measurement. Of course, the current, most popular, way to gauge pain is through patient self-reporting. Hospitals and physician offices use a pain identification chart to help people assess their pain on a scale of one to 10.

How do we measure pain? | HowStuffWorks

A pain scale measures a patient 's pain intensity or other features. Pain scales are a common communication tool in medical contexts, and are used in a variety of medical settings. Pain scales are a necessity to assist with better assessment of pain and patient screening. Pain measurements help determine the severity, type, and duration of the pain, and are used to make an accurate diagnosis,

Pain scale - Wikipedia

The NRS, using an 11-point scale (0—‘no pain’ to 10—‘worst pain’, or ‘pain as bad as it could be’), is often preferred due to its administration simplicity and reliability. 1 VAS is considered the ‘gold standard’ technique and is used particularly in pain-related research. It consists of a 100 mm unmarked line with standardized wording: ‘no pain’ on the left of the line, and ‘worst pain imaginable’ on the right—the patient then places a mark on the line ...
