GURPS Villains... what an idea. Villains are the heart of most campaigns, the thing that makes a Hero, in dramatic terms. The villain can be as personal as a brother, or as impartial as disease. Action heroes spend much more of their time reacting to the villain than actively advancing their own agenda.

The Generic Universal RolePlaying System, or GURPS, is a tabletop role-playing game system designed to allow for play in any game setting. It was created by Steve Jackson Games and first published in 1986 at a time when most such systems were story- or genre-specific.. Players control their in-game characters verbally and the success of their actions are determined by the skill of their ...

Playing as villains dramatically helps gives players this feel. They're not supposed to win! Playing as true villains in RPGs is — I think — rare. This is especially true in campaigns, because GMing villains is really hard. Villains are often antisocial, selfish, fight amongst themselves, and are subject to being played as cartoons.
