With this model, Tubbs focuses on the five most important components of human communication including “ input ” , “ filter ” , “ channel ” , “ noise ” and “ time ” .
“ Input ” , as Tubbs (1983) stated in his work, is “ all the stimuli, both past and present, which gives us our information about the world ” (Tubbs & Moss 1983, pp.27). In other words, it means that the physical and social background of communicators contribute to their understanding of the communication itself.
